But what about the rest of the world?
The Chinese Imperial Tradition
國 [国] guó, 國家 country, 中國 China

- The old character 或 depicted 土 territory defended by 一 a wall and 戈 weapons. Then 或 got surrounded by 土, representing the borders of a nation, producing the full form 國. (或 was then borrowed for the similar sounding word huò 'or'.) The simple form 國 dates back to the Sòng dynasty (960-1279); it has 玉 (yù) 'jade' in place of 或. There was a variant 國 with 王 (wáng) 'king' in the middle.

culturalism (vs. nationalism)
Harmony
亂 [亂] luàn

"爪又 two hands working with 翛 silk threads hung up on 门 a stand"
--Karlgren.

丷 was added to represent one of the threads.

The simplification of the left side to 舌 is at least a thousand years old (广韵).

The meaning has drifted from 'unravel' to 'disorder'.

Although 亂 was not really derived from 舌 shé 'tongue', one might construe sticking one's 舌 tongue out as a form of 乱 disorderly conduct.
和 hé, harmony, peace
(the same word means ‘harmony’ –as in cooking or music– and ‘peace’ in classical Chinese: the practice of harmony produces peace, teaches how to promote peace)

禾 hé (‘grain’) phonetic + 口 kǒu 'mouth‘: singing in harmony, or talking together

口 can also be taken together with 禾 to mean plenty of 禾 grain to 口 eat

when humans have a harmonious relationship with nature 同 tónɡ,
the same, sameness, uniformity, conformity

cover of □ an opening: fit together
Harmony → Plurality

Harmony is the reconciling of differences into a harmonious unity.

The Tso Chuan [左傳 (左传)Zuǒ zhúàn] reports a speech by the statesman Yen Tzu (died 493 B.C.), in which he makes a distinction between harmony and uniformity or identity.

Harmony, he says, may be illustrated by cooking. Water, vinegar, pickles, salt, and plums are used to cook fish. From these ingredients there results a new taste which is neither that of the vinegar nor of the pickles.

Uniformity or identity, on the other hand, may be likened to the attempt to flavor water with water, or to confine a piece of music to one note. In both cases there is nothing new.*

Tso Chuan, twentieth year of Duke Chao, 522 B.C.
from Fung Yu-lan, A Short History of Chinese Philosophy
Harmony → Plurality

Herein lies the distinction between the Chinese words t'ung [同 tóng] and ho [和 hé] .

T'ung means uniformity or identity, which is incompatible with difference.

Ho means harmony, which is not incompatible with difference; on the contrary, it results when differences are brought together to form a unity.

But in order to achieve harmony, the differences must each be present in precisely their proper proportion, which is chung [中 zhōng] .

Thus the function of chung is to achieve harmony.

from Fung Yu-lan, A Short History of Chinese Philosophy
Harmony → Plurality

A well-organized society is a harmonious unity in which people of differing talents and professions occupy their proper places, perform their proper functions, and are all equally satisfied and not in conflict with one another.

An ideal world is also a harmonious unity.

The Chung Yung 中庸 Zhōngyōng says: "All things are nurtured together without injuring one another. All courses are pursued without collision. This is what makes Heaven and Earth great." (Ch. 30.)

Harmony of this sort, which includes not only human society, but permeates the entire universe, is called the Supreme Harmony.

from Fung Yu-lan, A Short History of Chinese Philosophy

A Narrative
Qianlongdi 乾隆帝 to King George III (1793)

• “As your Ambassador [Macartney] can see for himself, we possess all things. I set no value on objects strange or ingenious, and have no use for your country's manufactures.”

George Macartney, 1st Earl Macartney
1737–1806

- Chief Secretary for Ireland, 1769-1772
- East India Company Governor of Madras, 1781-1785
- Embassy to China, 1792
Lord McCartney on China

• “The Empire of China is an old, crazy, first-rate Man of War, which a fortunate succession of able and vigilant officers have contrived to keep afloat for these hundred and fifty years past, and to overawe their neighbours merely by her bulk and appearance. But whenever an insufficient man happens to have the command on deck, adieu to the discipline and safety of the ship. She may, perhaps, not sink outright; she may drift some time as a wreck, and will then be dashed to pieces on the shore; but she can never be rebuilt on the old bottom.”
“For it would now seem that the policy and vanity of the Court equally concurred in endeavouring to keep out of sight whatever can manifest our pre-eminence, which they undoubtedly feel, but have not yet learned to make the proper use of. It is, however, in vain to attempt arresting the progress of human knowledge.”
George Macartney, 1st Earl Macartney
1737–1806

• “The breaking-up of the power of China (no very improbable event) would occasion a complete subversion of the commerce, not only of Asia, but a very sensible change in the other quarters of the world. The industry and the ingenuity of the Chinese would be checked and enfeebled, but they would not be annihilated. Her ports would no longer be barricaded; they would be attempted by all the adventures of all trading nations, who would search every channel, creek, and cranny of China for a market, and for some time be the cause of much rivalry and disorder.”
Nevertheless, as Great Britain, from the weight of her riches and the genius and spirits of her people, is become the first political, marine, and commercial Power on the globe, it is reasonable to think that she would prove the greatest gainer by such a revolution as I have alluded to, and rise superior over every competitor.
George Macartney, 1st Earl Macartney
1737–1806

• “When Marco Polo, the Venetian, visited China in the thirteenth century, it was about the time of the conquest of China by the Mongol Tartars, with Kublai khan at their head. A little before that period the Chinese had reached their pitch of civilization; but not having improved, or having rather gone back, at least, for these hundred and fifty years past, whilst we have been rising in arts and sciences, they are actually becoming a semibarbarous people in comparison with the present nations of Europe.”
“The sick man of Asia”

• “Here lies a sleeping giant. Let him sleep, for when he awakes he will shake the world.”
  – Napoleon

• “The Chinese people have stood up.”
  – Mao Zedong

That the Chinese people, with a population of more than one thousand million, should achieve modest prosperity is a matter of great importance for the history of human development.

The populations of countries with high incomes do not reach 900 million, but it took them more than 200 years to reach their current standard of living, starting from the industrial revolution.

Countries with medium incomes are less than 600 million, but they dedicated more or less 100 years to reach today’s level, staring from the beginning of the 20th century.

The sum total of the populations of these two kinds of countries is 1,470 million, which represents 25% of the total world population.

China, in just 100 years, the period running from 1950 to 2050, will have raised a population of somewhere between 1,500 million and 1,600 million to the level of the moderately developed countries, thus creating a miracle in human development.

At present, China is mid-way through this developmental process. She has made positive contributions to the world through her accelerated economic development, profound social transformation, wide-ranging social reform, and above all, through the reduction to a large degree of poverty.

The Risks of ‘Modernity’ from a Chinese Perspective

Internal risks:

• Centrifugal socio-economic forces
• Ethnic conflicts
• Uneven development among regions
• Corruption (“white” GDP)
• Organised crime
• Political legitimation of the CCP
• Scarcity of natural resources (raw materials, energy)
• Environmental degradation (“green” GDP)
• Epidemics
• Ultranationalism
• Populism
• Social Welfare costs;
• Aging population
• Democratisation of a large country:
  • 大国 dàguó vs
  • 超级大国 [超级大国] chāoji dàguó
• Failure to develop a domestic consumer market

Statistics

• In terms of its share of world GDP as a country, China now ranks 2nd or 3rd (with Spain ranking 8th, perhaps). Therefore China is an economic superpower.

• In terms of per capita GDP, China is one of the poorest nations of the world, sharing the same rankings as Angola and the Congo. Therefore China is a developing country.

• Paradox: the first economic superpower that is poor pobre.
